He heard the blonde's soft mumble, "Dave."

He sat on the edge of the bed with one elbow on his knee, chin resting in his hand. He glanced over his shoulder. The naked figure on the opposite side of the bed twitched and curled into itself, gathering the white sheet. He ran his fingers through his short, dark hair. The smoke from the forgotten cigarette swirled in the moonlight. The other was there. But he wasn't there there.

Someone to be there to pick him up when he fell. That's what he wanted in Taylor.
